The Role of Pluralism in Catholic Business Education

John Langan:

Current State of Students

Howard R. Greene, The Select New York: HarperCollings, 1998, p. 202). He has listed what his survey of 4,00 undergraduates showed to be the goals shared by students in public and private colleges: "making a good deal of money, being in a position of personal power, marrying the right person, having good friends, using the educational advantages that they received" And Greene provides elsewhere in his book abundant evidence of the extent to which an undergraduate education is viewed as primarily and perhaps even sometimes not more than a means to further professional training that will provide the basis for achieving these goals.
