Romanus Cessario, OP, is a professor of theology at St. John’s Seminary in Boston. He has published numerous articles and books on moral theology and on the thought of St. Thomas Aquinas. His next book, Thomas and the Thomists, the Achievement of Thomas Aquinas and His Interpreters, co-authored with Cajetan Cuddy, was released July 2017 by Fortress Press.

David N. Foote is associate professor of Catholic studies at the University of St. Thomas in St. Paul, Minnesota. His research and teaching focuses on the medieval church and society, especially the role of the Church in the development of the Italian city-states.

Adam Glover is assistant professor of Spanish at Winthrop University, where he teaches courses in Latin American literature and culture. He has special interests in Latin American poetry and the relationship between poetry and theology.

Msgr. Romano Guardini (1885–1968) held chairs in the philosophy of religion and Catholic Weltanschauung at the Universities of Berlin (1923–1939), Tübingen (1945–1948), and Munich (1948–1963). As author of more than sixty books and hundreds of articles, he was one of the pillars of German Catholicism during the twentieth century. He was a pioneer in the liturgical reform movement. His life and work profoundly influenced the development of Catholic theology between the two world wars and after, and his influence continues to be felt through popes Benedict XVI and Francis. Proceedings for the beatification of Monsignor Guardini began in December 2017.

Brett David Potter teaches in the areas of modern Christian thought, comparative religious ethics, and religion and culture at Queen’s University in Kingston, Ontario. His primary research is in the area of religion and the arts, which flows from his background as a filmmaker and musician. His recent teaching and research also explore interreligious dialogue and the relationship between theology and phenomenology.
