

CONTRIBUTOR NOTES

ADAM GLOVER is assistant professor of Spanish at Winthrop University (Rock Hill, SC), where he teaches courses in Latin American literature and culture. He has special interests in Latin American poetry and the relationship between poetry and theology.

EMMANUEL FALQUE is honorary dean and professor in the faculty of philosophy at the Institut Catholique in Paris. He specializes in patristic and medieval philosophy, phenomenology, and philosophy of religion. His books translated into English include The Metamorphosis of Finitude: An Essay on Birth and Resurrection (Fordham University Press, 2012); God, the Flesh, and the Other: From Irenaeus to Duns Scotus (Northwestern University Press, 2015); Crossing the Rubicon: The Borderlands of Philosophy and Theology (Fordham University Press, 2016); The Wedding Feast of the Lamb: Eros, Body, and Eucharist (Fordham University Press, 2016); The Loving Struggle: Phenomenological and Theological Debates (Rowman & Littlefield, 2018); The Guide to Gethsemane: Anxiety, Suffering, and Death (Fordham University Press, 2018); and Saint Bonaventure and the Entrance of God into Theology (Franciscan Institute Publications, forthcoming).

STEPHEN E. LEWIS is professor and chair of English at the Franciscan University of Steubenville (Steubenville, OH). He teaches a variety of periods and figures in British and American literature, and writes about modern and contemporary American, British, and French literature, and modern philosophy and Christianity. He has translated books by Jean-Louis Chrétien, Jean-Luc Marion, and Claude Romano. He is writing a book on post-World War II French Catholic thought, centered around the journal Dieu Vivant.

M. T. LU is associate professor of philosophy at the University of St. Thomas. He writes primarily on Aristotle and issues in the ethics of life.

PYONG-GWAN PAK, SJ, teaches as an associate professor in the Department of Religious Studies at Sogang University, Seoul, South Korea. He received an MA in religious studies from Columbia University, and earned a PhD in theology from Boston College. His areas of research interest are the history of Christian spirituality/mysticism and comparative religion/mysticism, particularly in terms of the interrelation between theory, practice, and experience.

LAURE SOLIGNAC, graduate of the École normale supérieure, is Maître de conférences (assistant professor) in philosophy at the Institut Catholique of Paris and a member of the École franciscaine of Paris. She specializes in Franciscan thought, anthropological thought of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and anthropological discourse from antiquity to the present. She has published two books: La Théologie symbolique de saint Bonaventure (Paris: Parole et Silence, 2010), and La Voie de la ressemblance. Itinéraire dans la pensée de saint Bonaventure (Paris: Hermann, 2014). She has also edited a collection of essays on medieval anthropology: La Figure d'Adam (Paris: Hermann, 2015).

VINCENT WARGO received his BS in chemistry and BA in philosophy from St. Mary's College of California, and his MA in philosophy from the Dominican School of Philosophy and Theology in Berkeley, California. From there, he traveled to Belgium to complete doctoral studies at Katholieke Universiteit, Leuven. His dissertation examines Martin Heidegger and Josef Pieper on the nature of the philosophical act. He currently teaches philosophy at the University of Saint Francis in Fort Wayne, Indiana. His primary research interests are phenomenology and Thomism.