

The Integration of a Catholic Social Teaching Website into a Business Curriculum

Megan M. Kalina and Mary U. Henderson

Abstract

The paper provides the rationale for a website designed to support ethical decision-making based upon the tenets of Catholic Social Teaching. The website is unique in that it will house helpful materials and links to resources to support students and alumni.

This paper addresses the need for this particular website designed specifically for university students and alumni in business professions. The rationale supporting the content and links included in the design of the webpage will be discussed.

There are many ethical issues present in our society today across the spectrum of fraud, sexual harassment, environmental issues and other such areas. These ethical situations, which have come to light, make a website like this potentially very valuable to those struggling to make the best decision or those seeking additional information. While students may not currently be grappling with these types of issues, they may encounter them in the future. This website will be a place for students and alumni to find resources to help inform and empower them to make decisions, which support Catholic Social Teaching.
